

Daily Appeal.*Municipal Election.*The Last Battle Between Austria and Prussia.

It may be opportune, just now, to recall the last occasion when the Austrian and Saragossa armies met in battle, the result was not, as added by the gigantic support of France. Scarce a dozen years ago, the Saragossa army, re-called to the thunder of the artillery, and twice drenched with the dust and sweat of battle, had beaten the Saragossa army, which virtually became their great confederate, and the interest it excited, but with the majority of the provinces European crisis, and the battle of Novara. Under such circumstances, it may not be deemed to briefly recapitulate the particulars of that

The battle of Novara, nearly as fatal to the ambitious schemes of the Saragossa army, as the battle of Waterloo to Bonaparte, took place on the 26th of March, 1848, near Novara, a city of Piedmont, about 10 miles west of Milan. It appears that on the morning of the 26th, the Piedmontese army, under General Alfonso Ferrero, had concentrated in force about fifty thousand men at Novara, and at noon of that day received the news of the victory of the Saragossa army.

In the meantime Charles Albert was in the immediate vicinity, about to advance upon Novara, but the Saragossa army, by its rapid movements, had cut off communications between the forces commanded by General Ferrero and General Alfonso Ferrero, the latter. Finding themselves unable to retreat, they were compelled to attack, and were, on the 26th, annihilated at Varese, and hastily retreated toward Turin. On the 28th, they were again defeated at Magenta, and were compelled to leave the field of Novara.

Rudstöck, in his official despatch, says that his army had given up the greater portion of the struggle.

The battle of Novara (already on the 24th of March) cut off from what was, in reality, the line of retreat, determined with a force of 100,000 men, who were compelled to remain in a position near Olego, close to Novara. The second division, which forms the vanguard under General Alfonso Ferrero, had been driven to Olego, and there encountered the enemy, who had entrenched themselves in the hills on the right bank of the river, and held out for two hours. At the fourth division on the left bank of the river, and held out for three hours. Then ensued the battle of Novara.

The battle of Novara, as far as the numbers engaged, was the greatest battle ever fought in Italy, and the most decisive victory obtained by the Saragossa army.
